

UN 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development - Public Consultation on revising the European Consensus on Development

Fields marked with * are mandatory.

(1) Introduction

The year 2015 was a strategic milestone for global governance, poverty eradication and sustainable development. It marked the target date of the UN Millennium Development Goals and a point to reflect on the progress made to date and the challenges ahead in addressing their unfinished business. 2015 also saw a series of landmark international summits and conferences over the course of the year (the Sendai Framework for Disaster Risk Reduction 2015-2030, the Addis Ababa Action Agenda, the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development and the COP 21 Paris Agreement under the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change) which have collectively re-cast the way the international community, including the EU, will work to achieve sustainable development and poverty eradication for many years.

Importantly, and in contrast to the Millennium Development Goals, the 2030 Agenda, including its seventeen Sustainable Development Goals, is a universal Agenda which applies to all countries. It reflects many core European values and interests and provides an international framework for tackling global challenges such as climate change. The EU response to the 2030 Agenda is moving ahead in a range of ways:

- Firstly, as part of EU efforts to implement the 2030 Agenda, the Commission Work Programme for 2016 announces an initiative on the next steps for a sustainable European future which will explain how the EU contributes to reaching the Sustainable Development Goals and map out the internal and external aspects of EU policies contributing to the implementation of the Sustainable Development Goals.
- Secondly, the High Representative will present the EU Global Strategy on Foreign and Security Policy that is expected to steer the different EU external policies contributing to the global vision of a more stable, prosperous and secure world. It should set out the strategic direction for the full range of EU external action, and as such will help guide EU implementation of the 2030 Agenda in external action.
- Thirdly, the EU will review its development cooperation policy. Existing leading policy documents (including the 2005 European Consensus on Development and the 2011 Agenda for Change) are currently framed around the Millennium Development Goals and need to adapt to incorporate the 2030 Agenda. Given its direct relevance to the EU's overall relations with developing countries, this review will be carried out in full consistency with the ongoing work on the future of the partnership between the EU and the members of the African, Caribbean and Pacific Group of States, under a post-Cotonou framework.

Views from this consultation will be used to inform the way forward on the initiatives above and in particular the revision of the European Consensus on Development and other external aspects of 2030 Agenda implementation. The consultation seeks your views on how development policy, in the context of EU external action as foreseen by the Lisbon Treaty, should respond to the range of landmark 2015 summits and conferences, and also to the rapid changes happening in the world.

Replies can include views which could apply only to the EU institutions and also to both the EU and its Member States – it would be helpful to clarify this in your response. This open public consultation will run for 12 weeks from 30 May 2016 to 21 August 2016. A brief summary and analysis of all consultation contributions will be published by November 2016 and all individual contributions will also be made available on the consultation website (unless respondents ask for their contributions not to be published).

(3) Context: why a change is needed

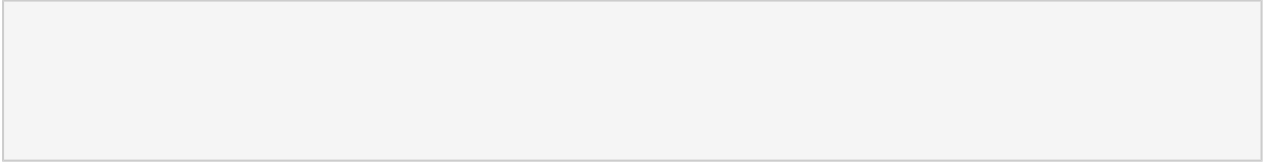

The EU and its Member States are determined to implement the 2030 Agenda through internal and external actions as well as contribute to the successful implementation of the Paris Agreement on Climate Change, given the strong interlinkages. In this context, our policies, should take into account changing global conditions and trends, to ensure that they remain fit-for-purpose across the time-horizon to 2030.

The global landscape has changed significantly compared to the time of adoption of the Millennium Development Goals. While much has been achieved, with more than one billion people having been lifted out of extreme poverty since 1990, great challenges remain and new ones are emerging. At global level, more than 800 million people still live on less than USD 1.25 a day. The world is witnessing multiple conflicts and security tensions, complex humanitarian and global health crises, deteriorations of human rights, environmental degradation, resource scarcity, urbanisation and migration. Migration flows across the world will continue to have important impacts, and present both a risk and an opportunity. The EU needs to address global security challenges, including tackling the root causes of conflict and instability and countering violent extremism. Climate change can continue to amplify problems and can severely undermine progress. Important changes include demographic trends, a new distribution of wealth and power between and within countries, the continuing globalisation of economies and value chains, an evolving geography of poverty and a proliferation of actors working on development. Projections also suggest important challenges are ahead (for example, continuing unprecedented urbanisation, and other demographic challenges including ageing societies for some and the potential for a demographic dividend for others). Continued attention will be given to a democratic, stable and prosperous neighbourhood. A revision to EU development policy should take into account these trends (including anticipating those that will remain central in future) whilst retaining a core focus on eradicating poverty and finishing the job started by the Millennium Development Goals.

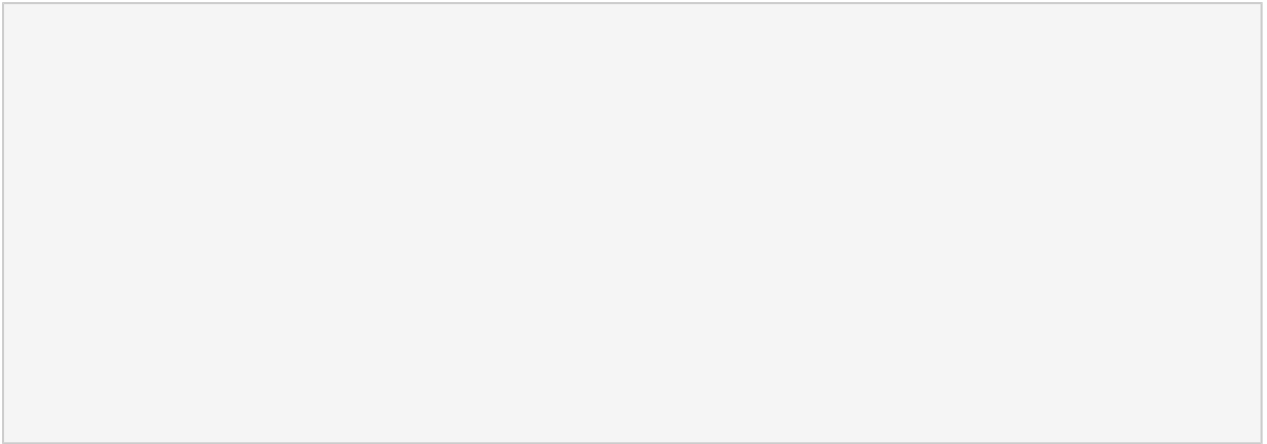

Finally, the EU Consensus needs also to adapt to the Lisbon Treaty, which provides for all external action policies to work within the frameworks and pursue the principles of objectives of Article 21 of the Treaty on European Union. In particular, coherence between the different parts of EU external action and between external and internal policies is crucial.

The EU will need to address these new global challenges, many of which require coordinated policy action at the national, regional and global levels. The 2030 Agenda provides a framework which can guide us in doing so.

3.1 There is a range of key global trends (e.g. changing geography and depth of poverty; challenges related to climate change, political, economic, social, demographic, security, environmental or technological) which will influence the future of development and the implementation of the 2030 Agenda. Which of these do you think is the most important?

3.2 How should EU policies, and development policy in particular, better harness the opportunities and minimise the negative aspects of the trend you identified in the previous question?

(4) Priorities for our future action: what we need to do

Implementation of the 2030 Agenda will require sustained EU efforts to promote a more just world, including a strong focus on the need to address gender equality and women's empowerment. Peace, inclusiveness, equality and good governance including democracy, accountability, rule of law, human rights and non-discrimination will need particular emphasis. The 2030 Agenda also requires recognition of the close interconnectedness between poverty, social issues, economic transformation, climate change and environmental issues.

To achieve poverty eradication, EU development policy will need to take into account key demographic and environmental trends, including challenges related to climate change, and concentrate effort on least developed countries and fragile states. The EU will also need to strengthen our approach to fragility and conflict, fostering resilience and security (as an increasing proportion of the world's poor are expected to live in fragile and conflict affected states) and to protect global public goods and to maintain our resource base as the prerequisite for sustainable growth. Peace and security, including security sector reform, will have to be addressed also through our development policy, as will the risks and opportunities related to migration flows. Tackling social and economic inequalities (both within and between countries) is a crucial element of the 2030 Agenda as is addressing environmental degradation and climate change. Job creation will be an important challenge in which the private sector has to play an active role. Finishing the job of the Millennium Development Goals requires identifying and reaching those people throughout the world who are still not benefitting from progress to ensure that no one is left behind.

To achieve lasting results, EU development policy will need to foster transformation and promote inclusive and sustainable growth. Drivers of inclusive sustainable growth, such as human development, renewable energy, sustainable agriculture and fisheries, and healthy and resilient oceans should be an important part of our efforts to implement the new Agenda as will efforts aimed at tackling hunger and under-nutrition. Implementation of the 2030 Agenda will require a multi-dimensional, integrated approach to human development. Implementation will also require us to address vectors of change, such as sustainable urban development and relevant use of information and communication technology. Our development policy will have to engage and identify new ways of partnering with the business in order to achieve sustainable and inclusive growth, industrialisation and innovation. Implementation of the 2030 Agenda will also require cooperation with partner countries and regions on science, technology and innovation. In all aspects of our external action, the EU will need to ensure that our approaches, including development cooperation, are conducive to achieving the 2030 Agenda's Sustainable Development Goals and that the EU intensifies efforts to promote pursue coherence between our policies and our internal and external action.

4.1 How can the EU better address the links between achieving the Sustainable Development Goals, the Paris Agreement on climate change and addressing other global sustainable development challenges?

4.2 How should the EU strengthen the balanced integration of the economic, social and environmental dimensions of sustainable development in its internal and external policies, and in particular in its development policy?

4.3 What are the main changes you would like to see in the EU's development policy framework?

4.4 In which areas highlighted above would you expect to see greater consistency between development policy and other areas of the EU external action in the implementation of the 2030 Agenda?

4.5 In which areas does the EU have greatest value-added as a development partner (e.g. which aspects of its development policy, dialogue or implementation arrangements or in which category of countries)?

4.6 How can the EU refine its development policy to better address inequalities – including gender inequality – in the context of the implementation of the 2030 Agenda?

4.7 How can the EU development policy make a stronger contribution to the security of people? How can EU development policy contribute to addressing the root causes of conflict and fragility and contribute to security and resilience in all the countries where we work?

EU-CORD believes that the revised European Consensus for Development must have as its focus the importance of achieving coherence and complementarity across EU policy making and programming, in a way that strengthens resilience and human security for the most vulnerable communities. The EU's own response to the 2012 United Nations General Assembly (UNGA) resolution 66/290 underscores its commitment to promoting human security, which it defines as the '...protection and empowerment of individuals who ultimately form the basis for achieving stability, sustainable development and human rights...it has the potential to be used as a holistic approach to development in the post-2015 development agenda.' The Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) represent the most fundamental framework through which the revision of the European Consensus on Development and future EU development policy-making must be informed. EU-CORD argues that SDG 16 represents the goal with the most comprehensive and integrated outlook required to contribute to human security. Some of the most relevant targets include 16.3; 16.6; and 16b.

The legislative frameworks exist, yet the practical process of programming continues to lack synergy. EU programming must be designed to address the root causes of conflict, and not simply its symptoms, in order to achieve a sustainable level of human security. Poverty reduction, national development budgets and support to strengthen governance and the rule of law cannot be de-linked; each needs the other to be sustainable. Programmes must be designed and implemented in ways that are context-specific, conflict- and gender-sensitive, and inclusive of civil society and representatives of the most marginalised groups. They must be committed to social cohesion and relationship-building within and between communities, as well as between communities, civil society, local and national government, and the private sector. SDG 16 provides the legitimacy, mandate and responsibility to build institutions capable of transforming the state's often toxic relationship with society. The high degree to which the social contract between citizens and the state has been eroded in fragile and conflict-affected states, owing to the failure by governments to fulfil their roles as duty-bearers, represents just one example of the way in which SDG 16 (specifically target 16.6) could be applied.

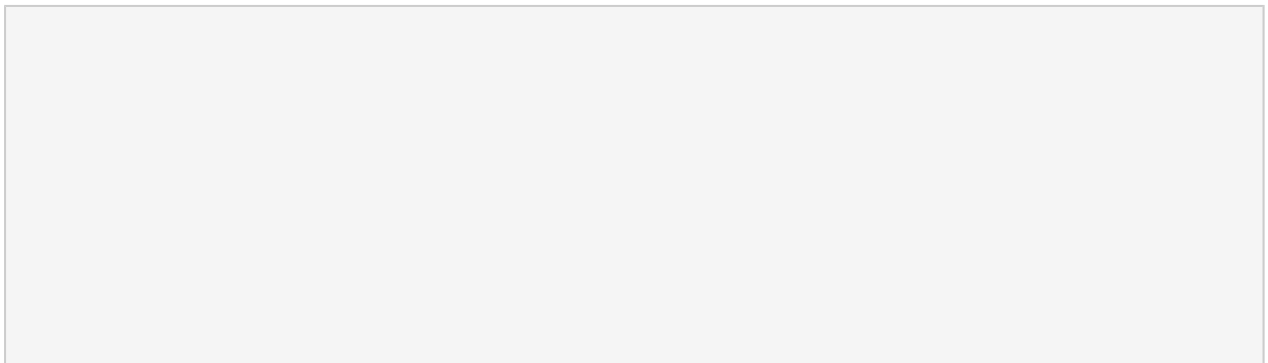

The important role of faith groups must also be recognised. EU-CORD would encourage EU Delegations at the country level to engage with faith leaders in order to understand better how they can more effectively empower faith groups that work to build connections between communities where unaddressed divisions can otherwise lead to violent conflict. These faith groups are often also the first responders in a crisis, carry significant responsibilities in meeting a range of SDG targets in e.g. health and education, can influence the embedding of a stronger rule of law, and understand how human dignity underpins human security.

By clearly signposting a concrete process through which the European Commission's Service for Foreign Policy Instruments (FPI), Directorate-General for International Cooperation and Development (DG DEVCO), and Directorate-General for Trade (DG Trade) can collaborate and ensure policy coherence with the post-Lisbon Treaty European Council and European External Action Service (EEAS), a revised European Consensus on Development would be well positioned to make a stronger contribution toward human security. Better-coordinated consultation and communication on policy development and programming among and between each of these EU actors would help the EU to play an increasingly effective role in contributing to human security and addressing the root causes of conflict. The drafting and authorisation of Economic Partnership Agreements (EPAs) within the context of Sub-Saharan Africa, for example, must be crafted in ways which are conflict-sensitive, and that are informed by conflict analysis available from EU Delegations and civil society, and by international standards for responsible business in conflict-affected and fragile contexts.

According to the OECD, 43% of the world's poorest people now live in countries affected by violent conflict and insecurity, yet international donors are failing to mobilise sufficient funding for human security programming. The UN Trust Fund for Human Security (UNTFHS) partly responds to this, funding activities that demonstrate the added value of the human security approach. The EU would be wise to consider establishing an equivalent EU-wide trust fund as a means of formalising good intentions and creating greater synergies and complementarity across the EU system when planning and delivering human security oriented interventions. This would help underscore the significance of Agenda 2030 and its broad commitment to human security for the revised European Consensus.

4.8 How can a revised Consensus on Development better harness the opportunities presented by migration, minimise the negative aspects of irregular migration on the implementation of the 2030 Agenda and better address the root causes of irregular migration and forced displacement?

(5) Means of implementation: how do we get there?

The principle of universality underpinning the 2030 Agenda will require a differentiated approach to engagement with countries at all levels of development. Official Development Assistance will continue to play an important role in the overall financing mix for those countries most in need (particularly the Least Developed Countries). The EU and its Member States should continue to progress towards achieving their commitments. However, in all countries our development cooperation will need to take account of other sources of finance, including by leveraging other (non-Official Development Assistance) sources of finance for poverty eradication and sustainable development. The delivery of the 2030 Agenda means that our work helping countries raise their own resources (domestic resource mobilisation), the provision of aid for trade, blending* and partnering with the private sector should be priority areas of focus. The Addis Ababa Action Agenda, an integral part of the 2030 Agenda, provides a framework for our efforts, including for our work supporting the right enabling policy environment for sustainable development in our partner countries. The implementation of the 2030 Agenda and the Paris Agreement on climate change under the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change should be closely coordinated given the strong interlinkages. Engagement with middle income countries, notably the emerging economies, will be important to the implementation of the 2030 Agenda, considering the role they can play in promoting global public goods, what they can achieve within their respective countries on poverty eradication and sustainable development, and the example they can set within their regions as well as their role in regional processes. Here differentiated partnerships can play an important role (examples include different forms of political, economic, and financial investment as well as cooperation in science, technology and innovation). Specific attention and focus should also be given to Least Developed Countries, as acknowledged by the Addis Ababa Action Agenda.

The EU's implementation of the 2030 Agenda provides an opportunity for enhancing consistency between the different areas of the EU's external action and between these and other EU policies (as outlined in the Lisbon Treaty and in EU's Comprehensive Approach to external conflict and crises). The EU will continue to pursue Policy Coherence for Development as a key contribution to the collective effort towards broader policy coherence for sustainable development. In our external action, the EU needs to consider how we can use all policies, tools, instruments at our disposal coherently in line with the integrated nature of the 2030 Agenda.

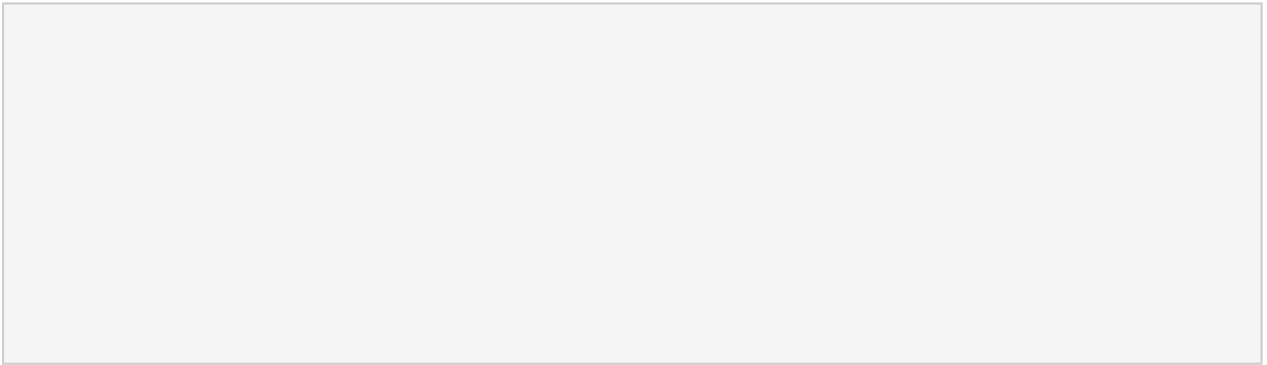

* Combining EU grants with loans or with equity from other public and private financiers with a view to leveraging additional resources.

5.1 How can EU policies, and EU development policy in particular, help to mobilise and maximise the impact of the increasing variety of sustainable development finance, including in particular from the private sector?

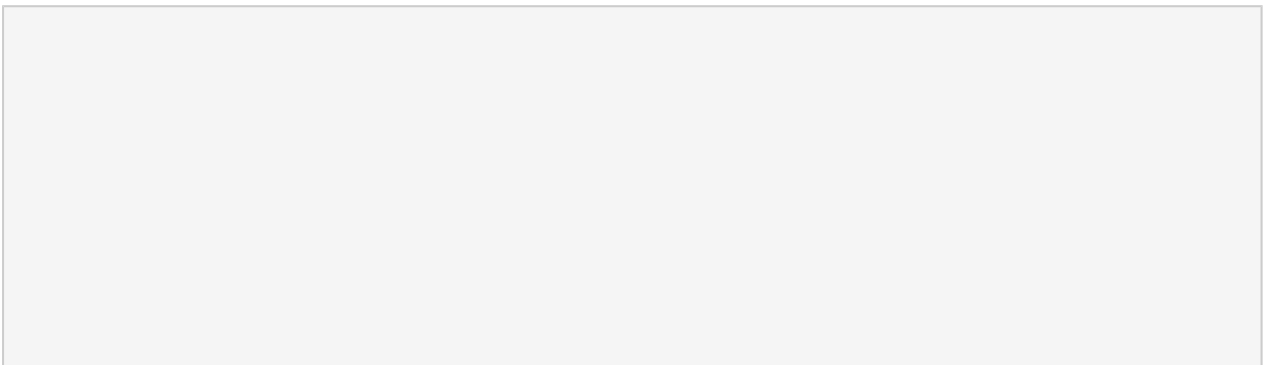

5.2 Given the evolving availability of other sources of finance and bearing in mind the EU's commitments on Official Development Assistance (e.g. Council Conclusions from 26 May 2015 on "A New Global Partnership for Poverty Eradication and Sustainable Development after 2015", and inter alia, paragraphs 32 and 33), how and where should the EU use its Official Development Assistance strategically and to maximise its impact?

5.3 How can the EU better support partner countries in mobilising their own resources for poverty eradication and sustainable development?

5.4 Given the importance of middle income countries to the implementation of the 2030 Agenda, what form could differentiated partnerships take?

5.5 Given experience so far in taking into account the objectives of development cooperation in the implementation of EU policies which are likely to affect developing countries (e.g. Policy Coherence for Development: 2015 EU Report), how should the EU step up its efforts to achieve Policy Coherence for Development, as a key contribution to the collective effort towards policy coherence for sustainable development? How can we help ensure that policies in developing countries, and internationally contribute coherently to sustainable development priorities?

(6) The actors: making it work together

An important feature of the new Agenda is that all governments, developed and developing, will need to work with a wide range of stakeholders (including the private sector, civil society and research institutions) to improve the transparency and inclusivity of decision-making, planning, service delivery, and monitoring and to ensure synergy and complementarity.

The EU must continue to work collaboratively with others and contribute to a coordinated approach. The Addis Ababa Action Agenda puts national plans for implementation (including associated financing and policy frameworks) at the centre. To maximise our impact, EU development policy should be based on a strategic and comprehensive strategy for each country, which also responds to the country-specific context.

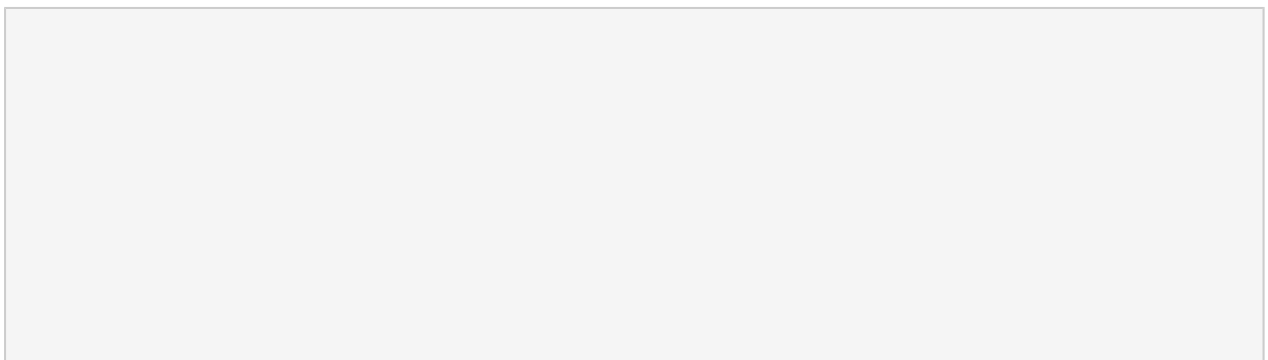

Our partner countries' implementation of the 2030 Agenda will inform our overall engagement and our development cooperation dialogue with them and will help shape our support for their national efforts. The EU should also help partner countries put in place the necessary enabling policy frameworks to eradicate poverty, tackle sustainable development challenges and enhance their policy coherence.

There is a need for a renewed emphasis on the quality of development cooperation, including existing commitments on aid and development effectiveness made in Paris, Accra and Busan* and through work with the Global Partnership for Effective Development Cooperation.

An updated EU development policy should also provide a shared vision that guides the action of the EU and Member States in development cooperation, putting forward proposals on how to further enhance coordination, complementarity and coherence between EU and Member States. Strengthening Joint Programming will be an important part of this. Improving the division of labour between the EU and its Member States in order to reduce aid fragmentation will also contribute to increased development effectiveness.

6.1 How should the EU strengthen its partnerships with civil society, foundations, the business community, parliaments and local authorities and academia to support the implementation of the 2030 Agenda (including the integral Addis Ababa Action Agenda) and the Paris Agreement on climate change?

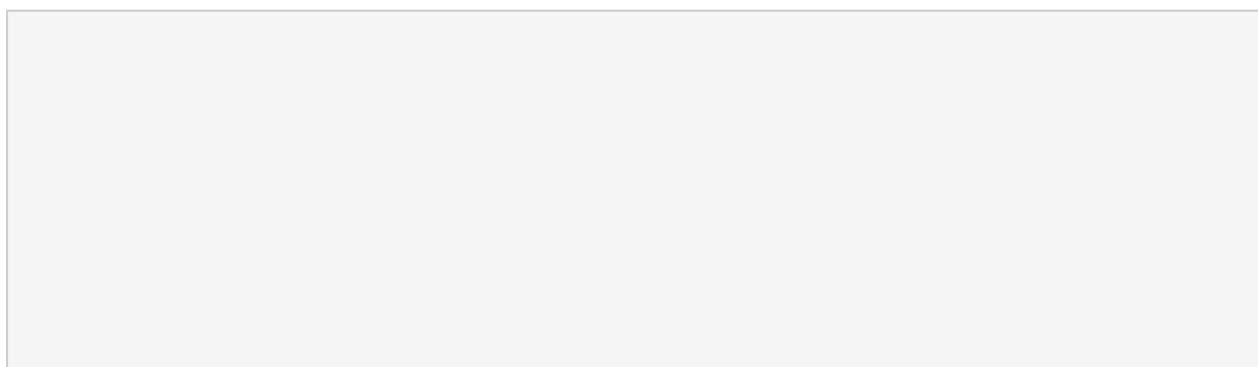

6.2 How can the EU promote private sector investment for sustainable development?

6.3 How can the EU strengthen relations on sustainable development with other countries, international financing institutions, multilateral development banks, emerging donors and the UN system?

6.4 How can the EU best support partner countries to develop comprehensive and inclusive national plans for the implementation of the 2030 Agenda?

6.5 What are the best ways to strengthen and improve coherence, complementarity and coordination between the EU and the Member States in their support to help partner countries achieve poverty eradication and sustainable development?

6.6 How can EU development cooperation be as effective as possible, and how can we work with all partners to achieve this?

Agenda 2030 wants to involve all actors: “We are determined to mobilize the means required to implement this Agenda through a revitalized Global Partnership for Sustainable Development (...), focused in particular on the needs of the poorest and most vulnerable and with the participation of all countries, all stakeholders and all people”. EU-CORD believes that the new Consensus should reflect this by strengthening its recognition of the significant role of faith actors. As a network representing Faith Based Organisations (FBOs), EU-CORD is convinced of and seeks to raise the EU’s awareness of:

- the importance of faith in the lives of the people affected by poverty, exclusion, conflict and injustice;
- the significant role that FBOs of all religions have played in recent years in international development and advocacy;
- the stronger and more integrated role that FBOs could have in implementing Agenda 2030, if their potential was unlocked;
- the necessity to increase “faith literacy” in the European institutions and EU Member States with regards to sustainable development and wider external action.

Most international development actors are based in secular societies, but are serving and empowering individuals in locations where faith is a central frame of reference for life and values. Without understanding this context, it is impossible to form effective partnerships for sustainable development.

This was also underlined in the joint statement of the World Bank and faith leaders, “Ending Extreme Poverty: A Moral and Spiritual Imperative” (2015). The UN has established an Inter-Agency Task Force on Engaging with FBOs for Sustainable Development. In its recent report “Realizing the Faith Dividend: Religion, Gender, Peace and Security in Agenda 2030”, IATF-FBO lead agency UNFPA recommends: “It is important to consider whether FBO communities can shift the dynamics from being donor recipients to equal partners in their collaborations with donors and multilateral agencies. Friendships should be encouraged to promote full engagement between actors.” We would recommend that, in order to complement Agenda 2030, that a comparable EU level task force is set up in order to effectively respond to this need to engage FBOs when setting policy and programming in development contexts.

EU-CORD is encouraged by the fact that many relevant donors and partners, including EU Member States, have joined the International Partnership on Religion and Sustainable Development (PaRD), “which aims to strengthen and institutionalise cooperation between governments, multilateral organisations, non-governmental organisations (NGOs), academia, and religious actors working in the fields of development, peace, interreligious dialogue and humanitarian assistance”.

FBOs work through faith leaders, communities and institutions at the local, national and global level reaching the most marginalised and vulnerable people. This web of relationships is well placed to take an integrated approach to sustainable development. Local faith institutions can have an extensive reach and a positive impact of the attitudes and behaviour of individuals and communities, they can address both root causes and impacts of poverty, conflict, injustice and unsustainable systems. Faith actors are able to serve as important connectors between and within communities in fragile states and conflict settings, and can play a crucial role in building more peaceful, inclusive and sustainable societies.

EU-CORD members and their partners see daily that local faith actors can address root causes of poverty and unsustainable livelihoods, e.g. by being a vehicle to introduce climate-sensitive agricultural practices, or through to changed behaviour by addressing trauma and gender-based violence. Sakharov Prize winner Dr Mukwege says in a recent interview with regards to his work in Eastern D.R. Congo: “15 years ago, the violated women were rejected by their communities. Today, the situation has changed, because we have educated the religious leaders”. Including and educating faith leaders has also been a game changer in the Ebola response in West Africa, which is shown in the report “Keeping the Faith: The role of Faith leaders in the Ebola Response” (2015) that was co-written by our member Tearfund. In many contexts, churches and other faith institutions also have a role as broker and advocate, bringing reconciliation and peace-making by addressing resentment, forgiveness, exclusion and alienation.

The EPSC report “Sustainability Now” (2016) is clear that Agenda 2030 means “that the global status quo is untenable and that change is necessary”. FBOs and religious communities from the “North” and the “South” will play a key role to allow the necessary transformational lifestyle and policy changes to happen. This is why EU-CORD calls on the EU to increase its level of partnership and collaboration with faith actors at the global, EU, member state, partner country and local levels.

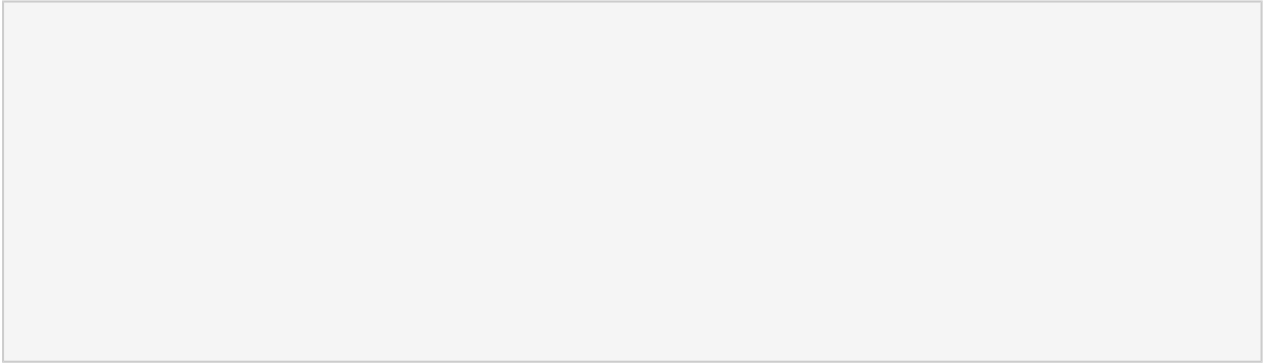

6.7 What further progress could be made in EU Joint Programming, and how could this experience be linked with other EU joined-up actions in supporting countries' delivery of the 2030 Agenda?

(7) Keeping track of progress

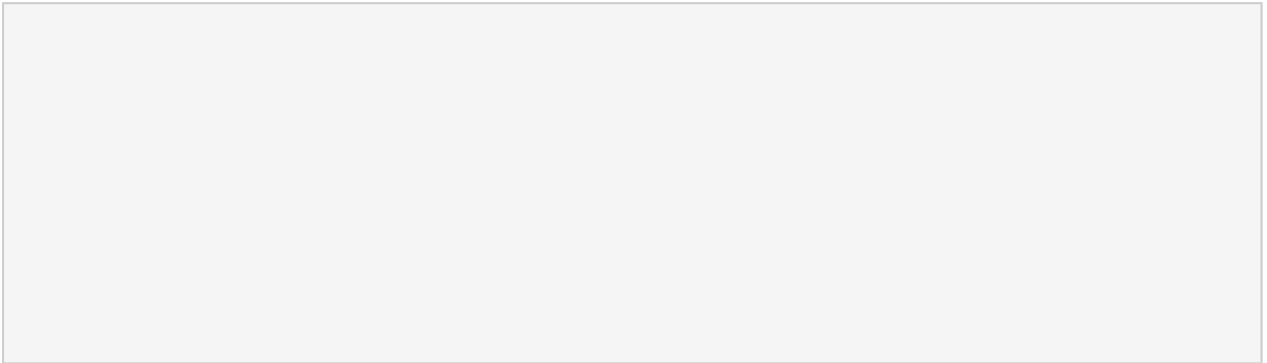

The EU will need to contribute to the global follow-up and review process for the 2030 Agenda. Keeping track of progress in a systematic and transparent way is essential for delivering the 2030 Agenda. The EU is actively contributing to the setting up of a Sustainable Development Goal monitoring system at global, regional and national level. Demonstrating results and impact from our efforts and the promotion of transparency will be important priorities for EU development policy, as part of a wider move to strengthen accountability, follow-up and review at all levels.

7.1 How can the EU strengthen its own use of evidence and analysis, including in the development field, to feed into its regular review on the Sustainable Development Goals to the UN?

7.2 How can the EU help to ensure the accountability of all actors involved in implementation of the 2030 Agenda, including the private sector? How can the EU encourage a strong and robust approach to the Follow Up and Review of the 2030 Agenda from all actors?

7.3 How should EU development cooperation respond to the regular reviews on progress of the partner countries towards the 2030 Agenda goals?
